SUNDAY MORNING SEPT. 9, 1809.

Mr. Breckinridge de .ies that he is a sunionist; that would be sufficient to throw the burden of proof on his opponents, if they made the charge without qualificaion. The charge is not that he is per se a Disunionist; but that he now leads a Disunion party -a party created by Disunionists of which they are the chief supporters; and that they support him to promote their puroses, which is the formation of a Southern onfederacy. Mr. B. doesn't believe there are fifty Disunionists per se in the United States. In that he may be correct. We never saw a revolutionist per se. There never was one who desired revolution for its own sake, unless he was partially crazy. If he means that there are not fifty dissatisfied with the Union as it is, and as they expect it to be, and who are, therefore, resolved to be rid of it, he is wofully mistaken. The most of his supporters in the cotton States belong to this class. If they do not, their anguage does not express their sentiments. They avow it in the most exaggerated shape. To give the proof of this, would require a volume. Mr. Breckinridge's testimony in is Frankfort speech is conclusive on that ubject; and the speeches of Southern rep caentatives on the floor of Congress show he same thing. We have published Mr. Yancey's speech made at Columbia, S. C., last December.

overnment. Let us consider for a moment the conduc f this Breckinridge faction, and see if it can mean anything intelligible but disunion. They met the Democracy of the United States in Convention. They demanded, as an ultimatum, an assertion that the party ad uniformly refused to make. They left the Convention upon the refusal to make the assertion, and got up a Southern organization. What was this but an emphatic an nonncement lo the people of the South that their Constitutional rights were abandoned and denied by the only remaining national party; that in political association they must now set up for themselves; that the Northern Democracy, on whom alone they could depend, could no longer be depended on? Did they expect that this new South ern organization could elect a President of a majority of Congress? They expected no such thing; they knew better. Did they expect, then, to obtain in the Union, by any Constitutional mode, what they demanded They knew better; everybody knows betler. The only political friends they had ln the free States they abandoned; they condemned as unfit associates of Southern men. Their conduct and pretensions were in the last degree offensive and insulting to those who had for years defended the South on all oc-etween them and the uncompromising op ponents of Black Republicans in the free States. Thus they voluntarily surrendered all prospect of gaining the end they sought in the Union. At the same time they voluntarily sore eadered what is the strongest motive with politicians-the prospect of great change going on there in favor of place and power. They abandoned the last chance of retaining power in the Federal Government. They adopted the plain palpable means to strengthen the Black Republican party, and secure its success in the Presidential election, whilst they proclaimed for a dissolution of the Union. Let us, now, ask any reflecting man the nothing? Did they want to protect property in slaves, by the power of the Federal Govindefined contingency? The way to ac complish this in the Union was to retain all the power they could for the emergency that might happen. This is obvious to every one. They pursued an opposite course, and hence, we must conclude, they did not intend to seek their object in the Union. They either did not care for their platform, or they did not expect to obtain it by Constitutional means. These reflections will occur to all sensible men: they force themselves on the public mlnd. There are an unaccountable series of facts, which admit of explanation only on one hypothesis. These men had a design, great in their imagination; and that design was a Southern Confederacy. It is idle to tell us they had no intelligent purpose. Such men do not act without a purpose and design. Their means point to an latelligent end; to one of vast magnitude and importance for good, as they profess to believe. It tive leaders, and the programme ske ched ont beforehand. This programme explains

The other is insignificant in numbers, but boastful in intent: unknown, or at least unaided beyond the slave States, it urges, through its leaders, projects of disunion, dependent, however, upou certain probable tingencies. Both are sectional and dangerous to the peace of the nation.

Next comes the two Union parties; first, as the most powerful and effective, is the great Democratic party, dear to the people by many long years of successful and de-voted labor, occupying only Constitutional grounds on all national questions, and ad hering strictly to the lines laid down by the fathers of the nation-represented in all parts of the country-nowhere sectional,

Thus you will perceive that the real issue rests between the great Northern, or Abolition party, represented by Mr. Lincoln, and the fime-honored Democracy, led on by Judge Douglas, of Illinois. Between these two the lasne lies, and by these two the two the Issue lies, and by these two the question must be decided. By siding with the Southern Disninonists, you will be aiding to upset this spleadid fabrio of free States. Therefore there is no course left for you to pursue than to endeavor, by every legitimate means within your reach, to effect the election of Mr. Douglas Ile is the park. candidate now before the people who dares to proclaim to the people of all sections—
North, South—everywhere—the doctrines of the Constitution and the supremacy of the law. He is the only man who possesses the moral strength to subdue treason, and the only one, I believe, whose principles are the supremacy when they do not want it. That the principle of having, or not having, slavery depends upon the further principle of sulvery depends on the supremacy directs.

The addition to the numbers within that period was 716,756; the rate of increase nearly, 25 per cent; more precisely, 28 80
